

Researchers Discovered A Nearly Intact World War II F6 Hellcat Off Miami Beach

Miami Herald | Nov. 27, 2012, 7:30 AM | 2,720 | 1

Share Email More

The crew of a research submarine studying artificial reefs off Miami-Dade County has discovered the mostly intact wreck of a U.S. Navy World War II fighter plane lying upside down 240 feet deep off Miami Beach.

Researchers aboard the Antipodes were using three-dimensional sonar gear to investigate a blip on the sea floor last June when they found the 28-foot-long Grumman F6F Hellcat -- encrusted with marine growth and dotted with exotic lionfish. The researchers shot high-definition photos and video of the plane and sent them to the U.S. Navy and Smithsonian Institution.

Wikipedia Commons

Officials of the Naval History and Heritage Command in Washington, D.C., identified it as a Hellcat -- rolled out starting in 1943 to counter the Japanese Zero.

Stockton Rush, CEO and co-founder of OceanGate, Inc. -- the private company that provided the sub to Miami-Dade County's environmental agency -- was surprised and elated at the find.

"It was quite a surprise coming on that wreck," Rush said. "At first, it appeared to be a 100-foot-long shipwreck, but we found it was an aircraft with a large silt berm that the Gulf Stream had pushed up against it."

The exact origin of the downed plane hasn't been determined yet, but Rush hopes to escort Navy experts aboard his sub to take a closer look in the next couple of weeks.

According to the Naval History and Heritage Command, 79 Hellcats were lost off Florida's east coast between 1943 and 1952. But many of the crews survived by bailing out or ditching. They were not part of the mysterious Flight 19 "Lost Patrol" that vanished on a routine training mission off Fort Lauderdale in 1945. The "Lost Patrol" consisted of five TBM Avengers and the PBM Mariner that was sent to look for them.

Robert Neyland, head of the NHHC's underwater archeology branch, says tampering with the wreck --

Miami Herald

- Miami Heat ekes out win against short-handed San Antonio Spurs
- The mixed messages of hurricane season 2012
- Ryan Dixon of Wilton Manors, once porn star, now HIV Diary

RECOMMENDED FOR YOU

A US Navy Ship Captured By North Korea In 1968 Has Suddenly Gone Missing

Powered by Saitthru

should some deep diver stumble upon it -- is a violation of the Sunken Military Craft Act, which treats Navy ships and aircraft as historic sites -- and possible graves.

According to Bob Rasmussen, director of the National Naval Aviation Museum in Pensacola, more than 12,000 Hellcats were delivered to the Navy, but only a handful are still around today.

"The discovery of one more -- even under 240 feet of Atlantic Ocean -- is important to naval aviation history," Rasmussen said. ____

(c)2012 The Miami Herald

Visit The Miami Herald at www.miamiherald.com

Distributed by MCT Information Services

Recommended For You

Texas Senator-Elect Blames Mitt Romney's Huge Loss With Latino Voters On The '47%'
Comments

How This Writer Manages To Live Well On $20,000 A Year

REVEALED: The Horribly Skewed Internal Polling That Made Mitt Romney Think He Would Win

BII REPORT: Why Mobile Commerce Is Set To Explode

Please follow Military & Defense on Twitter and Facebook.

Tags: Military, Defense | Get Alerts for these topics »

Share:

Short URL

- Twitter
 - Facebook
 - Buzz
 - Digg
 - StumbleUpon
 - Reddit
 - LinkedIn
 - Email
 - Embed
 - Alerts
- Newsletter

Miami Herald
Contact:
URL: <http://www.miamiherald.com/>

Recent Posts
America's Weather Satellite...

The Water Cooler

Featured 0 All Comments 1

Apply to be a featured commenter »